WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

Ever thought about visiting São Paulo, Brazil? This month, a walk down the Rose Kennedy Greenway could transport you to the South American city's streets — not weather-wise, unfortunately, but culturally. An augmented reality experience lets you see São Paulo's street art on Boston's own walls. Read more about exactly how that works on page 3 and at bostonmetro.us.

EU SAYS THAT TRUMP IS LOSING ON TRADE

The European Union's trade czar has no idea what President Donald Trump will say at the World Economic Forum next week, but she is clear what the EU's message will be. America is shooting itself in the foot by withdrawing from global leadership on trade, Cecilia Malmstrom, the Swede who has served as Europe's trade commissioner for the past three years, told Reuters. The retreat of the U.S. under Trump has played a big role in this push, Malmstrom says. Countries around the world are desperate for new trading partners, and the EU, confident after years of economic crisis and Britain's vote in 2016 to leave the bloc, has filled the gap. "We have shown that we have overcome that acute crisis, so many countries are turning to Europe for leadership and for partnership," said Malmstrom.

TRUMP: SEN. DURBIN TO BLAME FOR DEAL FAILURE

President Donald Trump on Monday blamed Sen. Dick Durbin for blowing up talks over a deal to help immigrants brought to the country illegally as children and said the Democratic lawmaker misrepresented his comments about Haiti and African countries. "Sen. Dicky Durbin totally misrepresented what was said at the DACA meeting," Trump said in a post on Twitter, referring to the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program that gave legal protection to young immigrants known as "Dreamers." Durbin has said Trump used the term "s—hole" when speaking about Haiti and African countries at the White House meeting about immigration policy last week. "Deals can't get made when there is no trust! Durbin blew DACA and is hurting our military," Trump added.

CITI TO RAISE PAY FOR WOMEN AND MINORITIES

4 Citigroup Inc. will increase compensation for women and minorities to bridge pay gaps in the United States, the United Kingdom and Germany, as part of its annual pay process this year, the Wall Street bank said on Monday. As part of the move, Citi also becomes the first big U.S. bank to respond to a shareholder push to analyze and disclose its gender pay gap. Citi said it had conducted a survey in the three countries, where it found that women and minorities are paid only slightly less than their male and non-minority counterparts. On average, Citi found, women and minorities are paid 99 percent of what men and non-minorities are paid, respectively. Compensation would be raised based on the pay gaps identified in the survey, Citi spokeswoman Jennifer Lowney said.

RESCUERS SEARCH FOR VICTIMS OF MUDSLIDES

5 The search for victims of last week's deadly Southern California mudslides pushed into Monday, with hundreds of rescue workers with dogs and scanners hunting for four people still listed as missing after the rain-driven slides that killed 20 people. Emergency officials said hopes were diminishing that they would pull more survivors from the ravaged landscape of hardened muck, boulders and twisted debris left behind by the Tuesday mudslides that scoured a landscape already left barren by last year's record-setting wildfires. "We're still out there with search-and-rescue crews who will continue to work until we can account for those four still missing," Santa Barbara County Fire Department spokeswoman Amber Anderson said in a phone interview.

Boston digital art installation brings Brazil's street art to city's Greenway

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Through augmented reality, Boston and São Paulo will be "swapping" street art.

This month, taking a stroll on the Rose Kennedy Greenway could transport you to the streets of São Paulo.

While the weather here still won't match that of Brazil's, the street art will, thanks to an installation by Brazilian artist Giovanna Casimiro and Boston Cyberarts called "ARLines of the City." But São Paulo's murals will only be visible via an app on your smartphone or tablet.

Through augmented reality, the graffiti and street art that makes São

Paulo so vibrant will be "swapped" with the Boston's own murals, giving residents here a peek, through a digital portal, into another country.

"The idea was really to create a cultural, visual exchange between two cities through the street art of the moment," said artist Giovanna Casimiro, who put the exhibit together.

What exactly is "augmented reality"? "I think the simplest explanation is [through how] people have a pretty good sense of what virtual reality is — you build a virtual reality world and go into it," said George Fifield, director of Boston Cyberarts. "Augmented reality is when you build a virtual object and place it into the real world. You can see it on a device like a phone or a tablet and it's there because it's located only in that spot, but it's not there because you can't bump into it."

To view São Paulo's murals in Boston, you have to use the free app HP Reveal. Hold your phone or tablet up to Boston's murals — three in Chinatown offer the best views, Casimiro said — and you'll see street art from São Paulo superimposed on those walls instead. Those in São Paulo can do the same to see Boston's art.

The Boston-São Paulo connection is the first edition of this project, but Casimiro hopes to expand to other cities.

Street art is a unique kind of public art, not always applauded in the art world but still available to people outside of institutions like museums. Though similar in that sense, the art that adorns walls in Boston has a "different aesthetic" than those in São Paulo, Casimiro said.

"Graffiti in São Paulo is illegal, but people there are doing it all the time. There's a huge movement of artists doing graffiti and they don't care, they are doing [it] as resistance," she said.

"The idea was really to create a cultural, visual exchange between two cities through the street art of the moment."

Police body cameras have some benefits, preliminary report finds

An analysis of the Boston program found "small benefits" for civilian encounters.

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Body cameras on police officers may "generate small benefits" for police-civilian encounters, according to a preliminary analysis of the Boston Police Department's body-camera pilot program.

The analysis of the pilot program, which required 100 officers to wear body cameras for a year, focused on if and how the cameras affected two main factors: complaints against officers and use-of-force reports by officers.

Throughout the pilot, 121 officers wore the body cameras. Those officers "received fewer citizen complaints and generated fewer use-of-force reports" when compared to "control officers," the analysis found.

Specifically, there were 12 fewer citizen complaints filed against officers wearing body cameras throughout the pilot year, or the reduction of one complaint per month for the officers wearing body cameras, compared to the control officers.

There were 17 total complaints against body camera-wearing officers and 29 against the approximately same-sized control group of officers.

The Boston Police Department said that overall, the number of citizen complaints against officers has been steadily decreasing over the past four years, dropping 41 percent.

The small reduction in use-of-force reports was ultimately not statistically significant, according to the analysis, with the body-camera-wearing officers totaling seven fewer reports than the control group.

"While the analysis showed a reduction, it did not determine the reduction in reporting was directly due to officers wearing BWCs [Body Worn Cameras]," the department said. "Since 2013, use-of-force reports have seen a 54 percent decrease, while arrests too have dropped 32 percent for the same period."

The department also stressed that these early findings should be "interpreted with caution." The analysis was written by researchers at Northeastern University and the final full report is set to be released in June with more information on police-citizen encounters, police proactivity, police lawfulness and police-community relations.

"Nationwide, the impact on body cameras has been varied," BPD Commissioner William Evans said in a statement. "Waiting for the results of the full analysis is prudent and necessary to really understanding the context and setting in which body cameras may have the most impact. It is likely that in the additional analysis the significance of the current findings may become more impactful, but given the Boston Police Department's historically low numbers, expectations for outcomes should be much more modest."

Boston receives $26M in federal funding to help the city's homeless

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Boston was awarded the money by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The city of Boston was awarded this week more than $26 million in federal funding from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development to focus on aiding the homeless.

In 2015, Mayor Marty Walsh launched an action plan to end chronic and veteran homelessness by 2018, and in October of last year, he specifically launched efforts to prevent and end youth homelessness in the city.

Massachusetts overall received more than $73 million in federal grants from the Department of Housing (HUD).

This funding is part of more than $2 billion in grants awarded by HUD to more than 7,300 homeless assistance programs across the country through the department's annual McKinney Homeless Continuum of Care competition.

"Having weathered record-breaking cold weather these past few weeks, we are reminded just how critical these funds are to our work on the issue of homelessness," Walsh said in a statement. "We have made significant progress in so many areas, but our work is not done. These funds from HUD are critical to continuing this work, and I want to thank HUD and the entire Massachusetts delegation for their continued support on this issue."

The HUD funding will benefit programs that support Boston's Way Home, the city's chronic and veteran-focused homelessness plan. To date, that program has housed nearly 1,300 formerly homeless individuals, according to the city.

Earlier in January, Walsh launched the Boston's Way Home Fund, which aims to raise more than $10 million over four years in order to create 200 new long-term housing units for the chronically homeless.

Pine Street Inn, Bridge Over Troubled Waters, Casa Myrna, St. Francis House, the New England Center and Home for Veterans and more are among the Boston organizations funded.

"This funding is critical to local Massachusetts programs that are on the front lines of helping those who might otherwise be living on our streets," said David Tille, HUD New England regional administrator, in a statement.

"Investments in these programs that find a stable home for our homeless neighbors not only saves money but quite literally saves lives."

The Boston area could see 5 inches of snow this week

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

More flakes are on the way today and tomorrow, according to the National Weather Service.

Some of the snow in Boston was able to melt last week, but already, more is on the way.

Monday will see the start of some light snow, with about an inch possibly accumulating throughout the day.

These flurries will mostly affect eastern Massachusetts and mostly remain light, though the South Shore into Plymouth County will see the heaviest amounts of snow Monday, forecasters said.

Heavier bands above those areas mean that forecasters think "2 to 4 inches of snow seems reasonable in this region...but can not rule out very localized 5 to 6-inch amounts."

From Boston to Taunton, however, just an inch or two of snow is expected. Still, forecasters warn, the weather will impact Route 3 and those traveling between Boston and the South Shore.

That's just the beginning, though. Forecasters are predicting "the potential for several inches of snow to portions of the region mainly late Tuesday into Wednesday afternoon."

This snowfall is expected to be more widespread. It's uncertain how much Boston could get Tuesday because the temperatures here may warm up a bit compared to other areas, but more accumulation is expected

Here's what to expect in terms of snowfall this week. DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN/METRO

ed Wednesday.

Either way, there will definitely be some precipitation. Forecasters put the chance of precipitation Tuesday night at 90 percent — with "new snow accumulation of 1 to 2 inches possible" — and on Wednesday, 100 percent.

Tuesday into Wednesday, 5 inches are expected to drop on the Boston area, with forecasters predicting "widespread 4 to 6 inches" across Eastern Massachusetts, "and a few spots higher."

That snowfall is "definitely not significant," Lenore Correia, a National Weather Service meteorologist, told the Boston Globe, "but enough to impact travel and will be shovelable and plowable."

There's a slight chance of snow showers between 7 and 11 p.m. on Wednesday, and then after that, Boston will be mostly sunny with an expected high near 33 on Thursday and 38 on Friday.

Report: Fake news consumption during 2016 campaign correlated with Trump voting Places where "fake news" was consistently read during the 2016 presidential campaign had a close correlation with Trump voting, according to a paper written by a team of Microsoft researchers.

The team looked at data from Internet Explorer and Edge browsers from July 2016 to Election Day, measuring visits to 70 sites that met Wikipedia's definition of fake-news outlets. "The average daily fraction of users visiting fake news websites is highly correlated with geographic voting patterns at the state level," said the report. "States or counties experiencing more fake news visitations also tended to vote for Donald Trump. These correlations remain high throughout the election campaign, peaking in October."

The report noted that during the 2016 campaign, 80 percent of fake news came from just five sites: endingthefed.com, thepoliticalinsider.com, infowars.com, americannews.com and libertywriternews.com.

The report also said that from July to November 2016, 68 percent of traffic to fake-news sites came from social media, and 99 percent of social-media traffic came from Facebook. MICHAEL MARTIN

New poll: Republican satisfaction is at its highest level in a decade

According to a survey conducted earlier this month, Republican satisfaction with our nation's trajectory is at its highest since 2007.

A Gallup poll found that 61 percent of Republicans — roughly six in 10 — say they are satisfied when asked, "In general, are you satisfied or dissatisfied with the way things are going in the United States at this time?"

One in four Republicans says they are "very satisfied" with the nation's trajectory, and 36 percent say they are "somewhat satisfied." Twenty-three percent describe themselves as "somewhat dissatisfied," while 15 percent still say they are "very dissatisfied."

As for Democrats, less than 1 percent say they are "very satisfied" and almost 7 in 10 say they are "very dissatisfied."

President Trump celebrates tax reform with fellow Republicans. GETTY IMAGES

Back in June, amid the hearing with former FBI Director James Comey regarding his investigation of potential Russian collusion, GOP satisfaction dropped to 41 percent. This was a 17-point drop from the 58 percent satisfaction rate the month before.

GOP satisfaction reached its lowest in October at 38 percent. As Gallup stated, the GOP gradually became more satisfied in the final quarter of 2017.

This new poll, which surveyed 1,024 adults from Jan. 2 to 7, came after Trump signed his massive tax cut bill and before his controversial "s—hole comment" last Thursday.

Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.), the only Democrat who was at the meeting where Trump allegedly said the controversial remark, publicly confirmed the comments. "He said these hate-filled things, and he said them repeatedly," Durbin stated.

In a joint statement on Friday from Sens. Tom Cotton (R-Ark.) and David Perdue (R-Ga.), who also attended Thursday's meeting, they both said they don't recall the comments allegedly made by Trump: "In regards to Sen. Durbin's accusation, we do not recall the president saying these comments specifically but what he did call out was the imbalance in our current immigration system, which does not protect American workers and our national interest."

On Sunday, however, Perdue said on ABC's "The Week" that he now remembers what occurred at the meeting and that the president "did not use that word."

Dating app Seeking Arrangement helps students connect with "sugar daddies" to make paying for school easier

patrick.king@metro.us

With how expensive college is nowadays, sometimes students have to come up with creative ways to pay for their education. And with the total student debt owed reaching over $1.2 trillion, many new students are doing so in ways that may be considered outside of the box.

In a press release from the online "mutual benefit" forum (AKA sugar daddy Tinder) Seeking Arrangement, it released its ranking of schools with students using its service to find wealthy benefactors to pay for

Now here's an interesting way to avoid student loan-debt... is took their tuition in return for, well, companionship.

This list broke down which schools had the most new members at the end of 2017, with Arizona State University nabbing the top of the list (352 new students, 1,361 total); Temple University in second (328 new students, 1,201 total); and NYU coming in third (316 new students; 1,529 total).

Seeking Arrangement says the average allowance given to its collegiate sugar babies $2,800 per month.

Regardless of your views on organizations like this one, you have to admit that number is pretty impressive.

But what's the catch?

To be clear, Seeking Arrangement does not force any of its members to exchange anything after meeting people through its site. According to spokesperson Brook Ulrick, the site is doing its best to attract students looking to take advantage of relationships with these kinds of beneficial dynamics.

"We offer students free premium memberships," explains Ulrick. "Sugar babies can actually use the site for free, but we give them updated features and get them featured on the site's dashboard for free, which is paid for if they sign up using their university IDs."

Ulrick stresses that Seeking Arrangement is a dating site, and any compensation paid to a sugar baby from a sugar daddy, or mommy is a by-product of an agreement set up by two consenting adults.

"It's a dating site just like any other, but it is unique in that we want people to talk about the time and the money they want to spend in a relationship beforehand," says Ulrick. "Those expectations are often times financial, but this is a site about relationships on your terms."

Ulrick believes setting up these kinds of couples through only helps everyone involved.

"A lot of sugar daddies like having like having sugar babies in college or university because it shows that they are ambitious," she explains. "It's an investment in their future. So rather than just handing over money or gifts, they are actually investing in this person. Most sugar relationships, whether or not they are seeing each other, their friendships usually last much longer than when the sugar babies are in college. Because there are no traditional relationship expectations, they don't break up, ever. Usually it's just the terms don't work out."

The increasingly uncertain future of 'The X-Files'

After 25 years, the second season of the series revival is back to FOX — but for how long?

GABRIELA ACOSTA
letters@metro.us

After its 2016 comeback, the "X-Files" reboot continues to gain followers. But according to producer and director Chris Carter and actor David Duchovny, while there are plenty of surprises in store, the future of the series is still uncertain. Especially with Gillian Anderson confirming that this season of "X-Files" is her last.

"Celebrating 25 years, makes me look back when I first met Gillian," Duchovny remembers. "It was during the casting, I was looking for some matches and she took them out and approached me, just like that, without saying a word."

The effect stayed. Building the world of "X-Files," with Duchovny's Mulder and Anderson's Scully at the center, has been a delight for Duchovny — even if he hasn't always understood it.

Mulder and Scully are back for an 11th season — but will there be a 12th without Gillian Anderson?
SHANE HARVEY/FOX

"The 'chemistry' thing, has always puzzled me. It's a word that I do not consider the best definition of why our characters still work," Duchovny says.

"Without the other, they fall as people," he continues. "As entities, as researchers. It is very romantic and, nonetheless, non-sexual, although there is a lot of tension. I think it's very romantic, when you have a man and a woman who treat each other as equals. And not only as equals, but as necessary components of each other." That still rings true for this 11th season, which airs Wednesdays on Fox. And despite being 25 years old, the series still offers a world of possibilities for its characters.

"We have told exciting, scary, funny and interesting stories in the first six episodes of last season," Carter says. "And now there will be ten, so I hope we exceed the expectations of our followers."

"It's funny, the show has always adhered to a reality that I would call a political reality, a social reality and a scientific reality," Carter continues. "It has been interesting that these realities have changed so much from its beginning, in 1993, to the present, to the ever-changing world."

The future may be uncertain, then, but for now, there's a whole, new season of "The X-Files" to enjoy.

'Black Lightning': The revolution will be televised

The CW takes a bold new direction with its latest superhero series.

matt.juul@metro.us

Racism and other real-world problems usually take a back seat to time-travelling villains and alien invasions on shows like "The Flash" and "Supergirl." But "Black Lightning," The CW's latest superhero series, plans to tackle these injustices head-on.

While showcasing the complexities of race relations in America may seem out of place on comic-book shows, "Black Lightning" masterfully balances those heavier themes with the superpowered action fans have come to expect from DC Comics' small screen ventures. And although it's fun to watch Jefferson Pierce (Cress Williams) hurl bolts of electricity at bad guys, it's clear that the series hopes to spark a wider conversation. Not only does "Black Lightning" refuse to shy away from tackling those important topics, but it also offers a glimmer of hope with its positive portrayal of a loving African American family.

"Black Lightning" airs Tuesdays at 9 p.m. on The CW. BOB MAHONEY / THE CW

Case in point? The first episode of "Black Lightning" sets a serious tone for the series with a powerful opening scene involving a situation that has become all too familiar for many people of color. Despite being a respected community leader, Pierce still gets harassed by white police officers during an evening car ride in a disturbingly accurate example of "driving while black."

The series also heavily revolves around Pierce's relationship with his daughters, Jennifer (China Anne McClain) and Anissa (Nafessa Williams). The latter is an avid activist who ends up becoming the hero Thunder. Williams tells Metro that she hopes her character will become a powerful inspiration for women.

"I believe that young women need to see her, in particular black young women," says Williams.

As the first major black superhero in DC Comics history, it's only fitting that "Black Lightning" is helping to blaze a new trail for African-American heroes on television.

Reasons people fail in their careers

It's never too late to break your horrible habits!

Trying to advance your career can be a frustrating thing. You may have a goal in mind of where you want to end up professionally, but it's those little damaging ingrained habits you have that get in the way of you achieving that goal.

We recently spoke with Carter Cast, the former CEO of Walmart and Professor at Northwestern's Kellogg School of Business, whose new book, "The Right (and Wrong) Stuff" outlines the five different character traits that might derail you on the way to a successful career.

1 Captain Fantastic
It's OK to be proud of yourself for getting hired at your current job. But being so confident that you think that you don't have any more room for improvement can be an extremely slippery slope. Cast likes to call this personality the "Captain Fantastic." You know the type, the guy who would check you against the wall on his quest to make it into the corner office.

"It's interpersonal issues often lead by poor listening skills and unbridled ego-drive," says Cast.

2 The Solo Flyer
The "Solo Flyer" is someone who may have been promoted to a leadership role as a result of good performance on the job. But once they get this position, they refuse to let anyone else take on any important projects.

"They try to fish instead of leading their team to fish," explains Cast. "They feel like all of the ideas have to come from themselves."

3 Version 1.0
This person is someone who refuses to adapt to their surroundings. This could apply to both not willing to learn new company-wide software programs or take instruction from a new boss with a different perspective than your old boss. Change is important.

Otherwise, you will just be an outdated employee from a time your industry has long forgotten.

4 The One-Trick Pony
The "One-trick Pony" is, as Cast describes them, someone who limits their professional mobility by only being really good at one thing. Cast explains that these people are "often viewed as one-dimensional and non-strategic," adding that they are usually unable to "connect the dots in seeing how all of the pieces of the puzzle fit together in an organization. So they top out at a certain level because they're too narrow."

5 Whirling Dervish
The last character trait, the "Whirling Dervish," is someone "who is often really talented, really creative and has a lot of ideas but they have a hard time focusing and prioritizing." Cast characterizes these individuals as people who will say yes to anything they are asked to do so "they overcommit and underdeliver." People in offices usually end up distancing themselves from the Whirling Dervishes because generally break their promises because they are spread far too thin.

Grades are in ahead of AFC title game

Patriots report card following the Divisional Round of the NFL Playoffs.

MATT BURKE

Dishing out grades from the Patriots' dominating 35-14 Divisional Round victory over the Titans while looking ahead to this coming Sunday's AFC Championship game against the Jaguars.

Tennessee, completing 35-of-53 passes for 337 yards, three touchdowns and zero picks. He finished with a sparkling 102.5 passer rating. He'll need to be just as sharp this Sunday if the Pats want to advance as Jacksonville finished first in the NFL in just about every major pass defense category. Opposing quarterbacks averaged just 169.9 yards per game against the Jags defense this season.

just 62 yards rushing on 15 carries, he helped out a whole lot in the pass game, catching nine balls for 79 yards. James White also returned Saturday, catching four balls for 29 yards and a touchdown out of the backfield. The Pats are at their best when they have a Kevin Faulk/Shane Vereen type who can catch balls from Brady in the flat. They now have two players capable of that in Lewis and White.

Malcolm Butler

What has happened to Butler? Even when he is in good position, he still gets beat as evidenced by Titans wide receiver Corey Davis' one-handed TD grab in the first quarter – which put the Titans up, 7-0. Jags QB Blake Bortles is not exactly Dan Marino in the mid-'80s, but the fact remains that his offense hung 45 points on the Steelers in Pittsburgh Sunday. The Jags don't have any stud receivers (Allen Hurns is their No. 1), so Bortles will be spreading the ball around. Bortles completed passes to nine different players Sunday against Pittsburgh. Will be interesting to see how Matt Patricia uses Butler this weekend.

last spring is finally paying off. Titans receivers that Gilmore was covering Saturday night came away completely empty-handed – as in he pitched a shutout. There's no reason why Gilmore can't blank the Jaguars as well.

Danny Amendola

Amendola's teammates call him "play-off" due to his ability to come up big this time of year and he more than lived up to that billing on Saturday night, catching 11 balls for 112 yards against the Titans. Opposing teams are well aware that when Brady's top offensive target – Rob Gronkowski – goes over 100 yards receiving the Pats went undefeated this season. Expect the Jags to be all over Gronkowski, allowing

Front seven: There was the threat that Derrick Henry would run all over the Pats defense Saturday night but the New England front seven was sharp all night, limiting Henry to just 28 yards on 12 carries. Grade: A

Brandin Cooks

Cooks was targeted nine times Saturday night but only had three catches for 32 yards. Cooks hasn't had over 80 yards receiving in a game since Nov. 26 against Miami, and hasn't had a 100-plus yard outing since Nov. 19 against Oakland. The good money says he'll break out in one of these play-off games. He's due.

Aries Emotional responses will leave you in an awkward position. Listen and assess what others have to say and contribute. Protect against theft.

Taurus Learn from the past and take advantage of what's being offered. Put more energy into any task you are responsible for. Your input will encourage others to pitch.

Gemini Use your imagination when dealing with your peers or helping others. Look for cost-efficient ways to get things done. A business meeting will broaden your prospects.

Cancer The way you handle your relationships with others and the contributions you make to people who have much to offer you in return will be rewarding.

Leo Fixing up your surroundings or investing in something that you want but don't need will leave you in a financial mess. Moderation should be practiced. Only buy what you need.

Virgo Spend more time on yourself. A healthy lifestyle, bit of relaxation or an update to your look will give you the boost you need to step into the future with optimism.

Libra Start a hobby, join a gym or do whatever it takes to ease everyday stress. Keep the peace at home and protect against physical, emotional or verbal abuse. Take precautions.

Scorpio Put some muscle behind your goals. Intelligence and fortitude will bring about the changes you desire. If you live your dream, you won't be disappointed.

Sagittarius A change to the way you earn your keep may be desired, but before you leave one position, make sure you have a better job to go to. Don't make rash decisions.

Capricorn If you share your feelings, you will get more accomplished. No one can help you if you aren't open about what you need others to contribute. Ask and you shall receive.

Aquarius Look for stable investments. Take the initiative to find out all you can without revealing too much about your plans, personal information or ideas.

Pisces Your insight will lead to wise choices. Financial gain is heading your way. Negotiate on your own behalf. Don't be afraid to ask for more. EUGENIA LAST
